architect's field report

Architect's field report. The report is a document that records the architect's observations and experiences during a field visit. It is a key component of the design process, as it provides a record of the information that the architect gathers about the site and the context of the project. The report is typically written in a narrative form, and it includes a variety of information, such as photographs, sketches, and notes. The report is used by the architect to inform the design process, and it is also used by the client to understand the architect's thinking and the progress of the project. Refer to AIA 201.4.2.2.
